Full-Sized Illustration of Female Guppyi Fish

Marvelously fascinating globeful of live fish—a charming bit of tropical undersea life to gleam on your living-room table and provide endless interest and amusement. See illustration in colors on page 103.

In each Bowlette are two Guppyi, not much longer than your thumbnail. The male is a very handsome, rainbow-hued creature; the female the larger but more drab-looking fish. Through their almost transparent bodies the tiny, delicately traced backbone is plainly seen.

These remarkable fish do not lay eggs. The young are born alive right before your very eyes and immediately they swim, feed and take care of themselves. Mrs. Guppyi bears six to a dozen young Guppyis about every six weeks.

Antics of Guppyis are ever fascinating. They dart about for hours on end, their brilliant colors flashing in the sunlight. It is a source of great interest, too, to watch successive broods of young growing up and assuming their colors and spots.

These fish require almost no care. The water need be changed only about once in two weeks. But a few grains of food about twice a week are required. The bowl, 6 in. high, including stand, is easily carried and placed anywhere. A cork seals it when shipped.
